HE IS NOT SATISFIED WITH DISSOLUTIONS

Attorney-General Still Considers Further Steps Against Oil and Tobacco Trusts.

Washington, July 17.—Attorney-General McReynolds is still considering the dissolution of the Standard Oil and tobacco trusts to determine whether further steps should be taken by the Federal government to promote real and free competition, which, it is alleged, does not exist in those industries under present conditions, notwithstanding the decree of dissolution.

In the tobacco case, the Attorney-General is giving serious thought to the bill introduced by Senator Cummins, directing the Department of Justice to apply to the Supreme Court from the decree of dissolution entered by the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, November 16, 1911, and also authorizing independent tobacco manufacturers and others to intervene in the case and object to the decree.

F. H. Levy, who represented the independent producers when they unsuccessfully sought to intervene before the final entry of the decree, has filed with the department a digest of the publication and an argument in favor of the legality of the proposed law. This now is under consideration, and the Attorney-General is expected to give his opinion to the Senate Committee on Judiciary, to which the Cummins bill was referred.

Intricate Problem. Some intricate legal questions, officials of the Department of Justice point out, are involved in the measure. The government, under the present statute, had sixty days in which to appeal to the Supreme Court from the New York Federal Court decree dissolving the tobacco trust, but former Attorney-General Wickersham agreed to the decree and did not appeal. It has been suggested that since the government did not avail itself of its right to appeal within the time limit, the tobacco interests were entitled to regard the decree as a final determination of the issues.

However, the Attorney-General, who regards the decree as "a mere subterfuge," is giving the Cummins bill consideration as a possible way to cure alleged noncompetitive evils.

In the Standard Oil case, the Attorney-General is continuing his study of the report of Charles B. Morrison and Oliver E. Pagan, government attorneys, who investigated whether the dissolution decree is being violated.

Are They Competing? The oil interests contend they are complying with the decree. While the government's bill in the oil case and the Supreme Court's decision were sweeping in character, the Attorney-General before taking any further action in the courts must decide whether the decree properly interpreted the Supreme Court's decision, which was designed to compel competition. Unfair competition methods are said to have been eliminated, and the question is, are the disintegrated companies competing or are they fixing the high price of oil.

While the Supreme Court decided both cases, the decree in neither case reached the highest tribunal. Attorney-General McReynolds' principal complaint against the decrees revolves about the pro rata distribution of stock among the same stockholders who controlled the original combinations. He pointed out to-day that the Supreme Court, in the Union Pacific anti-trust case, decided that such a distribution was not a real dissolution of a trust under the Sherman law.

OSBORNE DISCOVERS BONES OF COLUMBUS

They Are in Santo Domingo Cathedral, and Not Seville.

BELIEVES STORY FULLY

Suggests That They Be Carried Through Panama Canal at Opening.

Washington, July 17.—The remains of Christopher Columbus, discoverer of America, generally believed to be interred at present in Seville, Spain, are in reality in the cathedral of Santo Domingo, capital of the Dominican republic, having been kept there by a ruse of the Dominican people.

This is the substance of a remarkable story, brought to Washington by John P. Osborne, assistant secretary of state, who has just returned from a three-weeks trip to Santo Domingo and Haiti. He said to-day he received his information directly from the highest officials of the Dominican government.

As a result of the discovery, Assistant Secretary Osborne has suggested that the remains of Columbus be placed on a battleship, and carried through the Panama Canal, when it is opened, as a tribute to the great discoverer of the Western Hemisphere. His suggestion includes the return of the remains to Santo Domingo following the opening.

Exchanged for Remains of Son. The story told to Assistant Secretary Osborne by members of the Dominican cabinet, and repeated by him to a reporter to-day, includes a remarkable account of how the remains of Diego, the son of Columbus, were exchanged for those of the great discoverer. The remains of Diego are those now in Seville, he said.

The popular conception of the disposal of the remains of Columbus, which is supported by the best authorities, is that the remains of Columbus and his son were originally interred at Seville, and removed to the cathedral at Santo Domingo in 1542, and removed to the cathedral at Havana, Cuba, in 1795. In 1898, following the Spanish-American War, the remains were supposed to have been sent to Seville again.

Assistant Secretary Osborne said to-day that he had not only seen the real remains of Columbus, but that he had handled his bones, and also a bullet found in his body after his death. The bullet, it was said, because Columbus was known to have had a bullet in his body at the time of his death.

Assistant Secretary Convinced of Truth. Assistant Secretary Osborne said to-day that he had been thoroughly convinced of the truth and accuracy of the story told him by Dominican officials, and had questioned them carefully about it. He said he believed the information of great importance to the American people, who should know everything possible about the man who discovered their country.

The suggestion regarding the taking of the remains through the Panama Canal was made to Dr. Francis Peyot, the Dominican minister to the United States, by Assistant Secretary Osborne, and to other officials of the country. It was received favorably, he said to-day.

Walker W. Vick, newly-appointed receiver of customs for Santo Domingo, accompanied Secretary Osborne on his trip, and is also greatly interested in the question over the location of the remains of Columbus. Mr. Vick is now at his New Jersey home, preparatory to going to Santo Domingo to take up his new duties.

President Bordas, of the Dominican republic, was very cordial in his reception of Mr. Vick and himself, Secretary Osborne said to-day, and detailed his entire cabinet to entertain them. The minister of Foreign Affairs was away at the time, but the Minister of Justice, Senor Tejera, took charge of the party.

Tejera Formerly a Priest. Mr. Osborne said that Senor Tejera was formerly a priest, and a deep student of history, and was very much interested in everything pertaining to Columbus. He said he vouched thoroughly for the account of how the Dominican people, unwilling to have the remains of Columbus removed, exchanged them for those of his son.

The remains which the officials of the Dominican republic are at present in a lead casket about two and a half feet long, according to Secretary Osborne. Inside the casket is a small glass case in which is the lead bullet and also the dust of some bones.

Secretary Osborne is a physician, and was, therefore, much interested in the bones, some of which he found to be very good condition. One was an arm bone and another was from a leg.

The casket containing the bones has been removed from its original resting place, and has been placed in a special chapel, to which only high officials of the government have access, according to Mr. Osborne.

Inspection on the Casket. The principal distinguishing feature about the Columbus casket is an inscription on the bottom. Secretary Osborne said: "The inscription contains the name 'Christopher Columbus,' the Spanish for Christopher Columbus, with the title 'first admiral and discoverer of America.' Diego Columbus was known as the second admiral."

"I am thoroughly convinced that the remains I saw at Santo Domingo are those of the discoverer of America," said Assistant Secretary Osborne to-day. "Of course, I have no belief on what was told me and what I saw, but I believe that I was told the truth."

It seems to me that it would be an excellent idea to place the remains on a battleship when the Panama Canal is opened and take them through the canal. The United States would in that way be honoring a great man, and the people of the country would give an opportunity to learn more about him. In Columbus, North and South and Central America have a common hero whose praise all can join in singing."

Generally Accepted Theory. The following description of what was done with the remains of Columbus after his death is taken from a new edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica: "After the funeral ceremonies at Valladolid, Columbus' remains were transferred to the Carthusian monastery at Santa Maria de las Cuevas, Seville, where the bones of his son, Diego, the second admiral, were also laid. Exhumed in 1542, the bodies of both father and son were taken over sea to Hispaniola, and interred in the Cathedral of San Domingo. In 1795-1796, on the cession of that island to the French, the relics were re-exhumed and transferred to the Cathedral of Havana, whence, after the Spanish-American War of 1898, and the loss of Cuba, they were finally removed to Seville Cathedral, where they remain."

News of Petersburg

Times-Dispatch Bureau, 5 Bollingbrook Street, (Phone 1455)

Petersburg, Va., July 17.

The July term of the Hustings Court was opened to-day, but little business was done, most of the cases on the Common Pleas docket being continued over to the September term. The grand jury returned several indictments. The grand jury, it is understood, had under consideration the matter of vacancy and the better enforcement of the law regarding warrants. While there is great demand for labor, there are many men in the city, white and colored, who are apparently idle and refuse to work. How to reach this class of people and punish them if they refuse employment was the subject of consideration by the jury. A number of witnesses were summoned before the jury, which was in session both morning and afternoon, and the grand jury will report tomorrow to frame its report and recommendations. It is reported that the grand jury will also investigate the reports of the alleged irregularities on the part of election officers at the municipal primary election on June 19, which have been so persistently circulated.

Officers Elected. At the quarterly meeting of the Petersburg Benevolent Mechanical Association last night the report of the president, John W. Hays, an abstract of which has already been published in the Times-Dispatch, was received and filed. The resignation of William H. Baxter, for a great many years the efficient secretary-treasurer of the association, was accepted, and it was decided instead of combining the two offices into one, as heretofore, to separate them and elect a treasurer and a secretary. William E. Poole was elected treasurer and T. J. Meredith secretary of the association. The following were elected members of the library board: W. E. Poole, John W. Hays, James M. Quicks, Sr., T. J. Meredith and Charles Williamson.

Mr. Braxton resigned the office of secretary-treasurer because of his advanced age. For sixty-two years he has been an active member of the association, and for a great many years was its secretary-treasurer, discharging the duties of the office with rare efficiency and courtesy. His resignation was received and accepted with sincere regret.

Murder Case in Prince George. An adjourned session of the Circuit Court of Prince George County will be held to-morrow, Judge J. F. West presiding, for the trial of several criminal cases. The most important of these is that of Sidney Smith, charged with shooting and killing a colored woman named Taylor several months ago. The woman was shot at her home in the county in the absence of her husband and apparently without any provocation. At the last term of the court the question of Smith's sanity was raised and trial was postponed. The court appointed a commission to make examination as to the mental condition of the accused, and the commission will make its report to the court to-morrow.

Sunday School Convention. The Methodist of West Dinwiddie Circuit met yesterday at Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church in Dinwiddie and organized the Sunday School Convention of West Dinwiddie Circuit. J. B. Thomas was elected president, and J. W. Probst, secretary. There was a good attendance, and addresses were delivered by Presiding Elder J. K. Joliff and Arthur Kyle Davis, of Petersburg; Professor Landon Davis, of Bedford, Ky., and N. C. Scott, of Richmond. A fine dinner was served and an all-day picnic enjoyed.

Boosting Dairy Business. H. T. Prosser, agricultural agent of the Seaboard Air Line Railway; Paylor Rowe, assistant dairy inspector of Virginia, and O. T. Martin, of Washington, were in the city this morning. They subsequently left for McKenney to address a meeting held in the interest of the dairy business. On Saturday afternoon they will speak at a meeting at Dinwiddie Courthouse. Mr. Prosser is making a tour of that portion of Virginia traversed by the Seaboard Air Line Railway with the view of interesting the farmers in the establishment of dairies as a profitable business.

Alex Dunn, a negro, was given a hearing on the charge of feloniously shooting and wounding Charles Wilkins, colored, with intent to kill. The shooting occurred on Sunday afternoon, July 6, at the house of Dunn, on Cross Street, and was the result of a quarrel about 15 cents won or lost at a game of craps. Wilkins was shot in the breast and the ball has never yet been located, and he has only just gotten out of the hospital. It was at first thought his wound would prove fatal.
